Nearly 200 years ago people didn't even have an opportunity to imagine the level of modern technology development, but now, living in the 21 century we cannot imagine life without technologies, such as the Internet, social networking sites and mobile phones. From the start of a huge wave of digitalisation we knew, that these side of progress will definitely change the world. Unfortunately, we didn't know that it will affect not only positive, but also negatively.

On the one hand, new technology gave the society diversity of opportunities and also freedom in a way of communicating between people from different cities and countries. Now it is much easier to share ideas, researches and opinions through the fast system of the Internet. One of the greatest thing is that now we also can study online.

There are lots of resources for online education, especially it's important for those people, who live far away from society, but hopefully have network.

On the other hand, there is a negative side. To be honest, the Internet is not the safest place. The main cause is that there are lots of lies, not true information. Social networking sites are like an ocean of scammers and stalkers, that trying cheat on you. That is why some governments have a list of rules for using technologies, that can make online life safer.

The effects of technologies on people. Technologies progress throughout the years and takes a bigger part in our lives nowadays. Obviously these technologies start having a bigger impact on people's lives and freedom.

People daily use Internet, social networking sites and mobile phones. Technology progress led to integration of the Internet and social networks into our lives.

Nowadays people can communicate with each other by doing phone calls and texting in social media. The last one opens a huge amount of freedom to people. In the social media you can anonymously express your opinions without being judged or silenced. Obviously, there are different kinds of people and some of them use this freedom in a bad way, but generally other people enjoy the freedom they get.

All of this means big changes in society, negative and positive changes. The positive side of these changes is that people are not afraid to show their real identities and things they like. Also the mobility of mobile phones helps us stay updated almost in every part of world. In case of any emergencies we can call Hello! My name is Alex, 16 years old, and the following work is my contribution to your studies in the journal in a form of an article.

The vicious addiction

In the 21st century, smartphones entered everybody's lives. Nowadays, we could not imagine our lives without them. However, as we use phones on a daily basis, not many people tend to analyse the effects we are experiencing due to technologies. Even fewer realise possible dangers.

It is a fact that smartphones have a huge impact on our ways of thinking. Algorithms set our preferences and constantly show what we want to be shown. It creates a "bubble". Because of this, people do not get to see other points of view and become defensive of what they believe in.

There are positive aspects, too, undoubtedly. We get lots of possibly valuable information daily; thanks to search engines such as Google or Yandex, there is always a salvation for any dilemma; it is possible to make contact with lots of people from different places and countries and exchange bits of cultures.

If I were to touch on the subject of freedom, it would not be objective. For me, the phone is a tool to learn languages, contact peers and family and relax. For somebody else, a smartphone can be pure addiction and obsession, possibly the stem of being miserable. Generally, though, phones are able to can provide freedom. It all depends on the person.

I hope my submission gets featured in the journal.
